We were under the impression that, whatever had been done between Part Said and Suit, the latest reports previous to the gresent n a did not bint that the completion of the great enterprise was approaching. It was true that M. de Lessens, when he invited delegates from the European Chambers of Commerce to inspect the works in the begioning of April last, asserted that "a communication was open between the two sons: " and that "in 24 hours we have sailed. b wed by a steamer, from one ses to another." thit M. da Leespen, it will be observed, was oursful not to say the canal was onen-he only -ucaks of "a communication;" and a gentleman "In accompanied the delegates in their tour was. Austria and Prussin, we are told, are beginning to understand one another, and to lay saide their thoughts of quarrel. Spain justifies her recognition of the Italian Kingdom, and throws her infuence into the scale of liberty and peace. Europe is naturally attentive to this proceeding of the Western Powers. It is not a parade of strength, or a symbol of defiance, but it is a demonstration of concord, and of a material identify of interests. The spectacle at Cherbourg is all the more remarkable from its special and limited character. Time was when we should have token alarm at any naval display of our neighbours, and TTO Let situated on the Caine Road Wost, a almost resented any pretensions to maritime power | THREE STALLED STABLE and a Dogapart from our own. Nevertheless, the display is imposing. and as the eye rest upon the long black hulls of these modern fighting ships, an impression of power grows rapidly upon the mind. The French ironclade, at least the two-deckers, are strongly contrasted with the models of former days; indeed, it is more the ram than anything else which gives novelty and ungainliness to the new shins of war. It is not to be forgotten, however, in looking at the combined squadrons, that not a single model of either fleet has over been tried is battle. we know at least this, that every vessel in use of the Wharf now completed, where ressels the line one keep the sea, and is competent can be ladened and discharged. to serve in any part of the world. It is a great thing to unlearn national jeanusics and to get rid of the idea that the strongth of one country must mean the weakness of another. We may look with advantage on the French ships, and they may examine ours with as much benefit. Hitherto there has been a certain mystery made of these things, although modern naval architecture, is still only in its experimental stage. It deserves to be remembered by all who gaze upon this instructive spectacle, that though ron-clad ships have now been introduced for some six or seven years, nobody yet knows what s the true model for an ironalsd, nor even whether a fighting ship aught really to be clad in iron at all. The French Solferine bears no resemblance to the British Black Prince; the American Dunderberg is not in the least like either.
